A Decade of Community-Based Research on Karajarri Country

Wednesday 5 April 2017
3:30pm – 4:30pm

Anna Dwyer is a Karajarri woman and a prominent Nulungu researcher. She also plays an important role as Director of Karajarri Traditional Land Association and is Cultural Advisor for her community and Karajarri Country. Since starting at Nulungu in 2008, Anna has worked closely with her people in Bidyadanga Aboriginal Community and has undertaken considerable research on Karajarri Country.

In this seminar, Anna will discuss her collaborative community-based Karajarri research activities. As part of this Talking Heads seminar, Anna will discuss a number of research projects that she has undertaken with her people, to assist in research outcomes that support Kimberley needs, including:

- 1) Social impact of Models and Electricity Supply at Bidyadanga Community;
- 2) An Evaluation of the Karajarri Ranger Training Program - This evaluation is part of a national project entitled: Enhancing training advantage for remote Indigenous learners, which was funded by the National Centre for Vocational Education Research;
- 3) Cultural exchange to Canada with the Karajarri Rangers and
- 4) Climate Change and Adaptation on Karajarri Country and 'Pukarrikarra' places.

Anna will present information on the varied research she has undertaken with her mob over the past decade and discuss the importance of her role as an Aboriginal researcher based locally here in the Kimberley.

In conjunction with this presentation, which marks the official beginning of the 2017 Nulungu Talking Heads, the Nulungu Publication Series will be launched at 3:15pm.

Venue: The University of Notre Dame Australia
Bishop Jobst Library Foyer (NDB10), 88 Guy Street, Broome
